

Short bio

My name is Justyna Błach, and I am a clinical immunologist at the University Children's Hospital in Krakow. I specialize in treating patients with inborn errors of immunity and currently work primarily with children. I am particularly fascinated by the intersection of immunology and genetics. I have been awarded research scholarships at UCL and Royal Free Hospital in London and completed an internship in the cytometry laboratory at University College Dublin. Outside of my professional life, I love traveling and enjoying diverse cuisines.
